Hey!

Contrary to what you've implied, me initially refusing your offer was not personal. I was under the impression that you didn't have money to give away and although it was really generous to offer, Bryce and I have a stable budget currently - I didn't want to take money from you if I didn't really need it and you did, especially considering I don't visit. I didn't think that was right.

A little bit extra would help out with the bills and all the extra things that keep coming up (the car needs to be looked at, for example) though, and we really appreciate you offering to help out - it means a lot, to both of us. So I'll take your help, and we're both really grateful for it.

You know me, I have a lot of pride and it's hard for me to accept help sometimes!

Love you,
Hailey

Hi Hailey,

I hear that you and Bryce are well and loving university in Halifax! I'm am very, very happy for you!

Elephant alert!!! (deep breath)...

I've thought a lot about exactly what to say to you, but in the end I think pointing at Opapa as a champion and example of how far an education can take you and Omama who thought spending her hours as a teacher was the most important thing she could do with her life is the best I can do.

Can you please give me your bank info.

Allow me, like my parents, to do my part to invest in the future. Please do not think of this as something that you owe me. I do believe you are indebted to me and your Mother and too many others to count! I have debts like that too. But those kind of debts are only paid off by paying forward.

So.

I am attaching strings to any money I give you while you are in school: You have to pay it forward, to help support your children or Madeline's or others to support their education as best you can when you find yourself in my shoes.

Please accept this so that the world slowly becomes sustainably better. Do it for Omama and Opapa. Do it for the future.

I love you to the moon and back,

Dad
