

Nadim-Daniel Ghaznavi &lt;nghaznavi@gmail.com&gt;

---

Re: Financial disasters

1 message

---

Hailey Claire <heycmaia@gmail.com>
To: Nadim Ghaznavi <nghaznavi@gmail.com>

Mon, Nov 26, 2018 at 1:25 PM

Hey dad!

You haven't failed me in any way! The money you sent was always extra, we will be fine. As well as, the news comes at a good time, fortunately! I haven't been sure for awhile, but after lots of thought and conversations with counselors and academic advisers, I've decided to take a semester off in January. Although I am doing well in my classes, I'm not enjoying them. It just seems like I'm doing the work because I have to, and not because I want to. My classes aren't inspiring me or making me excited about them. And that is definitely not making me happy. So I'm taking a semester to figure out what makes me happy, and what I really want to do. I'll be working part-time, volunteering, and taking piano lessons again. It's for the best, I hope you understand.

Lots of love,
Hailey

On Mon, Nov 26, 2018 at 9:48 AM Nadim <nghaznavi@gmail.com> wrote:

Hi Hailey,

I have some bad news money wise: I'm totally running out of cash, being stranded in Canada without a home or a job has been draining our money at an alarming rate. And -of course- everything to do with this move to Ecuador has proven to be about twice as expensive as expected.

The bottom line is that I will not be able to continue to deposit $700 a month into your account.

I'm feeling pretty lousy about this, but I'm honestly getting pushed against the wall.

I will never stand by and let you fall and fail. At worst, you will always have food, clothing and shelter as long as I have that to share. And of course my love, but that doesn't pay the bills.

I'm really sorry Hailey, I feel that I've failed you on this.

With love,
Dad